Purpose: Does it work when we need it? Does it work where we need it? Does it cost us what we need? How long will it continue to work? Is there a way to update to or download the new version? If so, then the hardware manufacturer should not have to. It should be on the list of software to download, as well as the list of drivers and updates for the device. You should be able to find all of this with a quick internet search, but not every device can be updated in the same way. The following is a short list of manufactures that either stand behind the software or their devices that cost them nothing to support: Apple - They make iOS devices. I.e. The iPhone, iPads, iPods. Sony - They make devices like the Playstation, even the PSP and they also make Android devices. Nintendo - They make systems for the Miis, Pokemon, et cetera. Microsoft - They make devices like the Xbox, Kinect, etc. Steam - PC devices, such as the Sonos Connect, etc. HP - They make devices like the Envy, etc. I'm sure there are plenty of others but you get the point. These companies are the reason why we have well made software for operating systems and devices that we all use on a daily basis. If your manufacturer of choice is one of the ones listed above, then the software that you're paying for should get updates on the software as soon as possible and should always be on the list of things to update. We were actually told by one major manufacturer that what we were doing was the same as piracy, even though I am not sure I agree with that. The thing is, software is something that can be copied, something that someone on another site can access instantly. A company that is charging for it will be one of the ways of ensuring that that software is not free, so if you are doing something like what we're talking about on a site that is not up to the quality of software these companies would use, then that could very well be piracy. It doesn't mean that people who use the software are pirates or steal software. I can definitely see both sides to the issue, but the company that is charging you should have control over what is on their website and it should not be a free for all. I do appreciate the help and the support that everyone has been giving
