Not since Doomsday brought about the end of the world has the United States experienced so many doomsday moments in such a short period of time. Last week, we heard that North Korea was on the verge of firing a "new missile". Then we learned that Bolton was privately telling foreign diplomats that the United States was in the process of developing and deploying "anti-ballistic missiles" capable of hitting "everywhere on the planet". Those were provocative, headline-grabbing statements. But they were even more provocative considering the fact that North Korea has a history of moving rapidly toward ending the world. Pyongyang has claimed it has a nuclear missile that can hit the United States. History shows it has been willing to test that claim repeatedly. The North Korea homb tests come after Pyongyang has long been accused of using chemical and biological warfare. And the nuclear threat goes beyond missiles. North Korea has engaged in landmines and hypersonic weapons, and it has threatened, via Trump's favourite medium, Twitter, to rain down "fire and fury" on the United States. But North Korea has said on many occasions since it first developed a nuclear bomb that it would strive to reach a state that would give it the ability to destroy the United States want the world to end? I think we are looking at all possible scenarios. One possibility is that the United States wants the world to
