Over the course of the film's 132 minutes, the all-star cast has delivered a feverish and exuberant pitch, with terrific supporting performances from the likes of Donald Sutherland, Donald Glover, David Dastmalchian, David Strathairn, and many more. Throw in some great musical numbers and an eye-catching visual design, and you have a treat for a Sunday matinee. Some of the films that dominated this weekend were not necessarily the ones you might expect. The Prodigy's music documentary "Take it or Leave it" tops the box office with $16.7 million. The biopic "If Beale Street Could Talk" landed at the No. 3 spot, following a release by Disney. Add to the mix Skydance Productions' $68 million sci-fi, "Tomorrowland," which is on track to finish in the top five, while Disney's "The Jungle Book" comes in at No. 7. That film is also nearing the $400 million mark at the domestic box office, making it the third highest-grossing animated film in the studio's history. "The Prodigy: Take it or Leave It" looks at the British dance music band's rise to prominence in the early '90s. The documentary begins with two friends traveling to California in 1987 to record their debut album. They soon land a tour with the band when they return home. (A scene in the film shows a U.K. music promoter who is apparently never heard from again. "Never speak to him again," one band member says off-camera.) The friends, dubbed the De La Soul, worked tirelessly after that and, when offered a contract by Columbia Records, were looking at a
