It's got the best keybindings and I am comfortable and familiar with the way it works. My question is, where do I install it? I would like it to be "just there" (similar to Windows), but now I'm worried about breaking it after installing it in the wrong place. I have tried `sudo apt install vim` It says that vim is already installed. Is that the same as having it available, or does it need to be installed first? A: You can place your installed VIM in `~/vim`. There you can configure it and even tell it to launch every time you log in. Where would you place an application that you installed a couple of hours ago? In your home directory (for almost all users) is good. But if you installed something as root you can put it in /opt, and if it's important you can even put it in /usr. But if you want the application to be "just there" I'd put it in /opt, but if it's not important the location doesn't really matter.
