The problem is that you cannot select a link before the element you want to add a class to - even if you can select it. So, you may want to add a class to all links inside the element, before you select the element to set a new class. $(" .parentElem").each(function() { $(this).find("a").addClass("nottobeclicked"); }); Here is an example: Note that I used a class for it, which will be more efficient. It will work with any kind of attribute, and even if it's a single element. If you have multiple elements, just use the find() to get all of them. If you want only the very first element that has a class, use eq() like so: $(".parentElem").eq(0).find("a").addClass("nottobeclicked"); Train ride: A round-the-world train takes passengers on a journey of a lifetime. Sydney-Melbourne: From 19th to 28th June. To mark the 70th anniversary of the Menzies' era, the Round-the-World Express will travel 110,000 kilometres through over 30 countries and 15,000 kilometres of Australian territory.
