I need to get that as a NodeList, so I can process them further. I have used the following XPath to get "c:d" and "e:f:g" individually, but not in a list: "//*[@id="id1"]/node()"

I need the "c:d" and "e:f:g" in a NodeList, so I can use that in a loop to process that. A: "//[@id="id1"]/node()" should work. You may be using the wrong namespace. EDIT if you need to be consistent about which elements are processed: "//[@id="id1"]" "//[@id="id1"]/" "//[@id="id1"]/[1]" "//[@id="id1"]/[2]" Bookstores BOOKSTORES IN THE DOROUGH Scores of bookstores dot the streets of Fayetteville, and many of them are located downtown. Even if you're not looking for a particular book, you're sure to find one if you browse. Some bookstores offer a complementary wine or beer list, and many of them are toasting to the town with tastings of their own. Have some fun and browse, you'll be glad you did.Q: In Python, is there a way to get the raw object at some point in the code I have a class called Socket which has a "socket.socket()" method in it and I am currently typing in the following code: class Socket: c6a93da74d
