the brothers begin to get nervous about the mouse, and the exterminator is more concerned about being able to get rid of it than about getting the mansion sold. he offers the brothers money to let him trap the mouse, but the brothers refuse, and the exterminator begins to think about how to get rid of the mouse himself. the exterminator talks to a friend who owns a pet store, and gets the idea of selling the mouse to the pet store. even though the film is silly, i found myself entertained.

i think it's because it's a little bit like the game of "mouse" on the computer. the mouse is as helpless as it is stupid, and the exterminator, similarly, is baffled by the antics of the mouse. he has no choice but to try to reason with it, and when he does, we laugh. walken is so funny when he's not talking, and even though it's a mechanical mouse, the way it's played by the actors is funny, as is the way it moves. walken is a brilliant actor, but unlike paul giamatti, he isn't believable as a household servant, or even as a workingman. in this movie, he is only funny as an old eccentric who speaks in a voice nobody would believe. he has the right amount of humor and pathos, but not much else. he's like a bug on a pinball machine. he is the most used prop of the film. he is also the film's biggest problem. the exterminator is the only character in the movie who actually believes the truth he tells his clients, and yet he is the only character who doesn't change his behavior to suit the needs of the audience. he even goes so far as to tell the truth to the mouse at the end, but it doesn't matter. even when he does tell the truth, it doesn't matter.

the movie has some pretty good laughs, and a few scares, but there is not much to say about the plot, because it is there to support the action. it doesn't become more than a plot device, but there is enough action to make it fun. the comedy in mousehunt is about the same level as the comedy in the three stooges (remember them?) and this movie has its moments of slapstick. it has some sharp lines, and some of the special effects are good. the movie is an interesting, if less than admirable, attempt to use a mouse as the main character. this movie is a great example of the kind of movie disney has been making since the mid 1990's. it's not just made for kids, but it's just made for kids. it's a well-done, adult, comedy, but it is made for children. it's a good movie, because it is so badly made. it's so-bad-it's-good, and it shows that disney has a long way to go to catch up with pixar. it was made as a low-budget movie for disney, and it shows. it's not very good, but it's not awful. it's just a waste of time. the dvd has a lot of great features, but they are a bit too esoteric for the layman to see. the three-disc deluxe edition, which includes the original theatrical version, will be much more understandable. mousehunt is a smart and clever comedy with great performances by the cast. it also has some good visual gags. the only problem with this one is that it takes itself way too seriously, and it really tries to be a good drama at times instead of a comedy. like most films of its kind, mousehunt has a few gags that are pretty transparently lame and it has a few plot points that are a little too unbelievable, but still manages to make a good film. it's not as good as it should be, but it's also not as bad as it could be. it's a good movie for the whole family.
