as late as 1980, only four nato allies, britain, france, the netherlands, and west germany, were members of the alliance. they were joined in the 1980s by belgium, denmark, greece, iceland, italy, luxembourg, norway, portugal, and the united states. in the 1990s, the central european countries of austria, the czech republic, hungary, latvia, lithuania, poland, slovakia and slovenia, all joined. since then, the alliance has been extended to include the six eastern european countries of the former warsaw pact, as well as albania, bosnia and herzegovina, macedonia, montenegro, and serbia. in the case of europe, the alliance has always been a military alliance, and not a political one. the predominant political issues have dealt with the role of nato in post-war europe, and the evolution of the alliance as a permanent military organization. by the 1960s, nato had evolved from a wartime organization into a military alliance that offered political support to individual states in the event of aggression. as a military alliance, nato was based in europe, and its forces were largely deployed in europe. the other military alliance was the warsaw pact, with its headquarters in moscow. on 1 may 1989, the warsaw pact dissolved, replaced by the commonwealth of independent states. in 1991, the soviet union itself disintegrated. while the dissolution of the warsaw pact was the formal end of the soviet union, the former warsaw pact countries had become sovereign nations. the dissolution of the soviet union further increased the importance of the european union in the alliance. nevertheless, the nato-soviet treaty of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons (npt) was signed in 1970, ensuring that neither nato nor the soviets would manufacture nuclear weapons. nato was thus the first military alliance to explicitly promise not to use nuclear weapons on any of its members. 5ec8ef588b
