For the first time ever, starting with the 0.2.0 release, the official Defcon 2K source code is available as a user-contributed libre software component under the GPL, subject to the terms of the original BSD-3 license, and Defcon2K.org, a web-based, community-driven development forum. Defcon2K is a rogue agent coded from the ground up by long-time contributors, and is heavily inspired by the great work of wargaming developers like wargame.net and Introversion Software. It's existence is purely a labor of love, but is open to all users and will remain stable until the BBSD-3 license expires. Read more about this specific project below in the project page and in the project page . Global Thermonuclear Warfare (GTW), the game that ignites this industry, is the first of many games that will be inspired by the atmosphere of DEFCON, from the graphical style to the content to the interface design. In GTW, players compete for control of the Global Thermonuclear War (GTW) balance of power and control over world power; attacking enemy cities will show the power of your weapons with impressive effects, your cities can use the same scheme to strike back at your enemy. In the course of the game, a player's city will be destroyed and its happiness level will fall. With the world getting more and more miserable, the city will also be attacked. If the attack on the city can be repulsed, it will retain most of its population. If not, the population will decrease, the happiness level of the city will fall, and the city will be attacked again. This is the light bulb moment that triggers the desire to recreate a feeling of the concept of war from the television show, so global thermonuclear war is recreated in an important part of the game.
