In this particular instance We have decided to republish the very same information that you found via Google. Well this is just the first article that we found on the Net. Most likely you will have found these articles as well. If so, it's good. We want to make this information available to people, and this is the only reason you find it here. Keep in mind it's entirely up to you to know what you're downloading. Some people will be less careful, others will be very careful, and that's totally ok! If you are worried about other parties installing their own versions of the files or hacking you to use their version of the files, then you can use this article to see if the file you have is the correct version, or a modified version from another party. Hopefully, the way we have provided the information here, gives you a good enough idea of the dangers of using any file you find on the Internet, and the risks you run by ignoring our requests and download the MSI you found elsewhere.

Thanks to Michael from the Guru3D.com forum, we have found out that all patches have been published internally by Oracle, and that the link to that PDF is here. This is not an official version of the patch, it's a link to the pdf report that Oracle published internally. We invite you to click on the link and read the report if you're at all interested. We find this to be an interesting read, and we encourage you to share it with others. Oracle Database Database Releases are available as physical media (CD-ROM or DVD) or an FTP download. To request access to these releases, follow the instructions in Oracle Support Document 1071023.1 (Requesting Physical Shipment or Download URL for Software Media) from My Oracle Support. If you are receiving an error message that your request is not recognized, contact Oracle support. After the macOS Catalina is successfully downloaded, it will ask for booting time of macOS from the USB or hard drive.
