From manufacturer perspective, UIQ3 can handle twenty million phones (Hussain, 2012). The UIQ3 platform was more advanced and reliable compared to UIQ2. However, its also attractive to different manufacturers. Huawei, ZTE, Lenovo, and Samsung have embraced the platform and began rolling out the new devices. In addition, UIQ3 provides a better user interface to mobile phone users and allows easy input to the touch-screen devices. Besides, the open source platform continues to attract some big names in the manufacturing industries. Last year, LG announced its plans to release a new smartphone with Android, using the new UIQ3 operating system. The companies are seeking opportunities to employ and develop the UIQ3 operating system. For these reasons, it is becoming increasingly important for developers and device manufacturers to develop their own UIQ3 application because it allows them to utilize the features of the phones. It is now widely used as the default operating system of Android smartphones. It is interesting to mention that UIQ is now a more popular operating system on Android phones than Samsung's own OS. According to a report by NPD, UIQ now has a market share of 13 percent in all Android phones, while Samsung's own operating system, Android, is at 17 percent. UIQ is used in more than 30 countries. The success of UIQ OS is also due to its openness. June 15, 2015Infinity Nokia[BEST] v2.14 released - Important changes for Nokia-105 etc
