Key macros are one of the features most users want from computer software. They are similar to Hotkeys, except you get more choices. They're also great for use in certain programming languages, or for improving productivity. Hacks for better productivity Having Macros is one thing, making them work is another. That's why Keymacro comes with a couple of useful options, such as "Send by Email" and "Set as Favorite". There are also three different types of macros available to use. Each one of them is completely unique in its functionality, which means you can pick the one most relevant for your needs. The first one of these is a single character macro, but by using the Shift-key you can turn it into a Word or a Shortcut. With the Shift-key down, you can also record multiple characters simultaneously, making macro a convenient way of typing key combinations. Some people prefer the Shortcut macro, which can be used to perform a specific operation with a number of keystrokes. A 3-digit number is required for setting macros, which means you can change up to 99 macros, depending on your keyboard's hardware. The last option is the Text-Macro, which allows you to create a unique text message to be sent to a contact. All you have to do is enter your message, a recipient name, and your Macro ID. Once set, this is a great way of sharing something, but if you're looking to do so privately, then this feature will be a great help to you. Macros are extremely powerful, and are known to improve productivity while doing certain activities, such as editing text, communicating, or typing programs. As a standalone application, Keymacro allows you to create your own macros, and use them for free.
