Circuit board connectors may be characterized as having a low-profile or a high-profile. A low-profile connector has a connection point that is spaced a relatively short distance from a board edge, while a high-profile connector has a connection point spaced a relatively long distance from the board edge. One type of high-profile connector includes a contact having a relatively long and slender contact portion defining the connection point of the connector, the contact portion having an end portion that is bent to form a deflectable beam. The deflectable beam may deflect into contact with a conductive layer of a circuit board upon connection of the connector to the circuit board, thereby establishing electrical communication 04aeff104c
