Impact of CO<sub>2</sub>-saturated sea water on the survival of the coral Brille Comatula sanguinea in a natural habitat. The effect of CO<sub>2</sub>-saturated sea water (pH 7.8, 14 degrees C) on the survival of the coral Brille Comatula sanguinea was studied in natural habitats. Survival time was between 1.5 and 8 h; the longer survival times were recorded at noon with a diurnal cycle in salinity and temperature, but at the beginning of the day, when the sea water was supersaturated by CO<sub>2</sub>, survival times were much shorter than at other times of the day. Among the chemical compounds, some were found to decrease significantly the survival of the coral. These were the biocides triclosan and its degradation products and the phenolic compound 2,5-bis(1,1-dimethylethyl)-3,6-dithia-1,8-octanedione (TKD). Other chemicals, such as benzimidazole, did not seem to be deleterious for the coral. This study shows the influence of chemicals on corals in sea water under natural conditions.

The present invention relates to a composite article and a method of producing the composite article. For instance, a graphite heating element used for a heating cooker has a heating resistance layer made of graphite and an insulating layer made of ceramic stacked one on another and joined together. The heating resistance layer contains graphite powder and a binder. However, the insulating layer contains ceramic powder and a binder. The insulating layer contains inorganic particles other than graphite powder. The heating resistance layer made of graphite and the insulating layer made of ceramic have different thermal expansion coefficients. When the heating resistance layer is thermally expanded, therefore, a crack occurs in the insulating layer. The problem is serious in the case of a heating cooker that is heated under severe conditions. If the heating resistance layer is in the shape of a panel, the lengthwise dimension of the panel is as great as the lengthwise dimension of the insulating layer. Since the thickness of the heating resistance layer is relatively small, the lengthwise dimension of the panel
