What I am trying to do is, I need to have a'sticky' sort. The default sort stays as the user is clicking the columns. But I want the columns to stay in place even after they are clicked off. I can't just enable sticky sort since the column numbers are fixed in the datatable. What I have done so far is: After the user clicks a column, I have changed the sorting from descending to ascending and then back to descending. And, I am currently doing this only for one column. This is a quick fix but I do not know if this is the right way to do it. If anyone has any ideas on how to do this in a better way, please let me know. Thanks! A: Yes, it is, but I found a much simpler solution to your problem. Just have your action set a new sort for the table after the table has rendered. Here is the example that I use: If a user clicks a column: Change the sort for the table If a user clicks off the column: Change the sort back to the original sort It seems a little more complicated than what you posted, but you are still going to have to set the sort when the table is rendered. I do it in a different way, but you can do it the same way. If you don't watch Fox News or read New York Post, you may be led to believe the Occupy Wall Street (OWS) movement is just a bunch of disgruntled, do-nothing kids who play guitar in the park, practice yoga and talk about how the rich and powerful are oppressing the poor. After all, the protesters are occupying lower Manhattan's Zuccotti Park, a tiny strip of land that the U.S f988f36e3a
