Before I start the review, allow me to mention the interview I did with Adobe support with the team. We spoke about the beta releases of Photoshop CC 2018, and this particular interview is just over a week old, so some test results are still to come. When you do your own testing with the first, third, and nine beta releases, you are very likely to be using software that is not in full release version of Photoshop yet. So, the only results that matter are the ones that come from official beta releases of Adobe Photoshop CC 2018. The biggest reason why I'm excited about this new feature is that I can now work with a laptop all day, and then use the touchscreen on the iPad Pro to change parts of the image or start a new layer in the same session. With the U.S. economy still slow and other issues here at home, it's always a little disappointing to hear that the service is ending. To us, that's a sad compromise that makes us feel like we've given up too much.
