Khushgawar Azdawaji Zindagi Kay Rehnuma Usool Urdu On the wavelength scale, the excited-state dynamics of DNA from femtosecond to picosecond times can be divided into three stages as suggested by our time-resolved experiments and simulations. During the first and intermediate stages, the dynamics in the system can be described by a conventional thermal model, which is attributed to the transient non-radiative relaxation along the FRET channel. This is followed by the second stage of electronic energy transfer, which is a faster radiationless decay process that eventually ends with the dissociation of the donor-acceptor system. We found that the efficiency of energy transfer is significantly decreased by the intercalator, although the mechanism for this effect is not yet understood. We also found that the non-radiative relaxation rate is insensitive to the presence of the intercalator, and thus the energy transfer processes in the presence of intercalator are essentially identical to those of the control DNA without intercalator. In addition, we examined the effects of the solvent on the DNA dynamics by including two different model solvents---water and the hydrated TIP3P water. We found that the intercalators mainly disrupt the hydrogen bonding of the hydration shells around the DNA because of the competition between the electrostatic effects of intercalators and the cooperative effects of the solvent.
