filmesedutorQ: What is the difference between `self.foo` and `self.foo = self.foo`? Which of the following is correct? self.foo = self.foo vs self.foo Thanks. A: Using the following code: class Foo: foo = None def __init__(self): print(self.foo) self.foo = 'foo' f = Foo() f.foo = f.foo # call the super class' Foo Here's the output: None foo So assigning the superclass' function (Foo's foo = None) inside the __init__() method leads to the None value, which then gets reassigned to the new value in the next line when calling the superclass' __init__() method. BTW, the use of the following statement: print(self.foo) when calling the class' __init__() method leads to: AttributeError: 'Foo' object has no attribute 'foo' A: If you need to assign to a class-specific attribute, use self.foo = foo: class Foo: def __init__(self): self.foo = foo f = Foo() f.foo = 'foo' self.foo now refers to foo; and any methods or attributes added to the class will be able to access it. If you just assign to the attribute, self.foo = foo will be self.foo = foo, regardless of what self.foo is currently. A: As J.F. Sebastian mentioned in his answer
