To create a stacked color slide, hold down the Shift key and drag part of the image you want on the next slide over part of it. Depending on how you arrange your images, the preview may be clipped. You can drag outside any of the boundaries to add outside layers, even though the area itself is not visible. This technique works great for adding accents. For example, if you capture part of a house and place it on top of your main subject, you can drag part of the house outside the image to decorate the main image, without having to crop the page. With the new feature, you can share your PSD with reviewers and ask them to solve any issues they find without forcing you to sit in front of your computer when you are taking an all-important vacation. You can even close the PSD and close the program while they are in progress.
